Data is controlled for company size

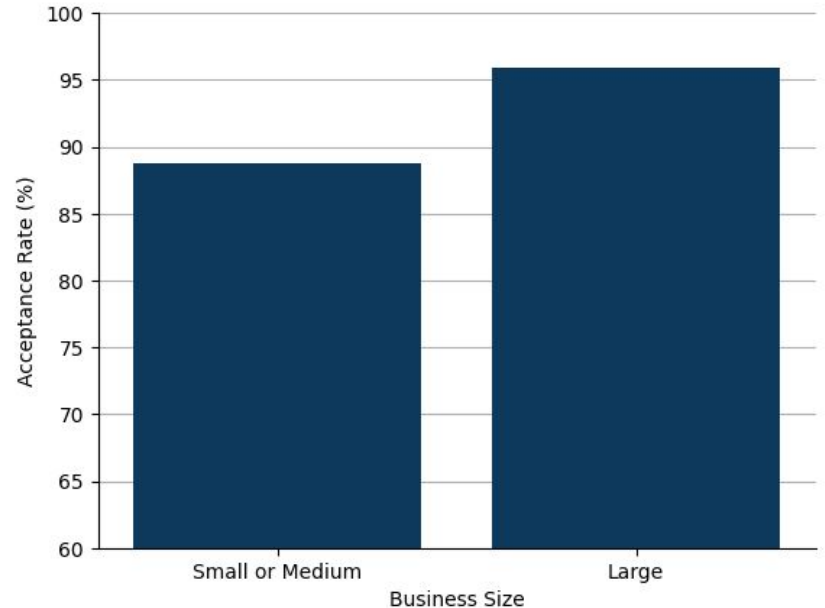

First, Who is Most Likely to Make It?

It seems that...

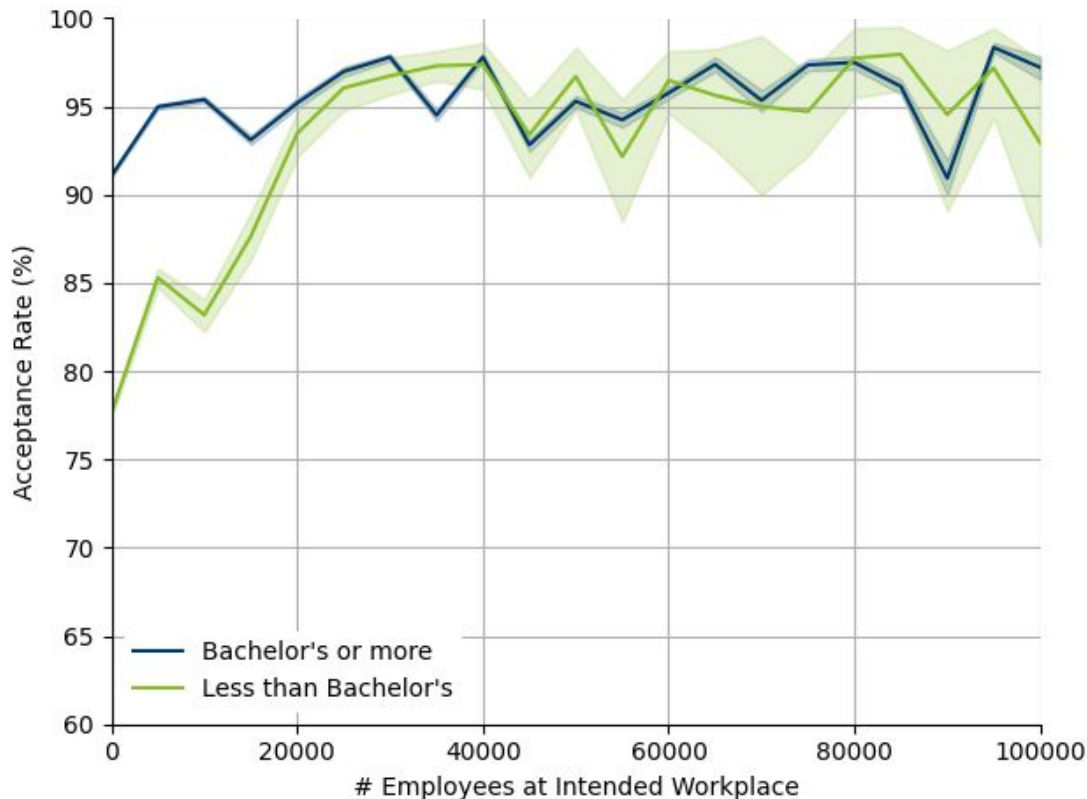

Education Matters

Company Size Matters

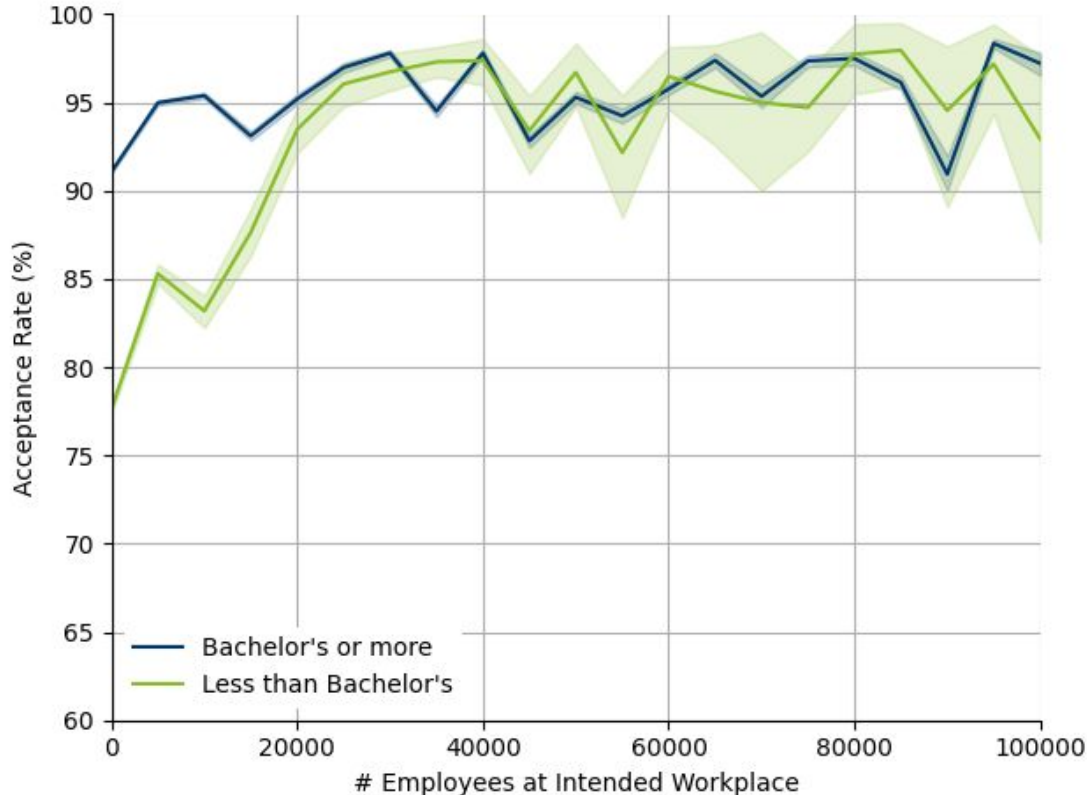

Company Size Compensates for Education

When a company is large enough, the difference in education becomes negligible

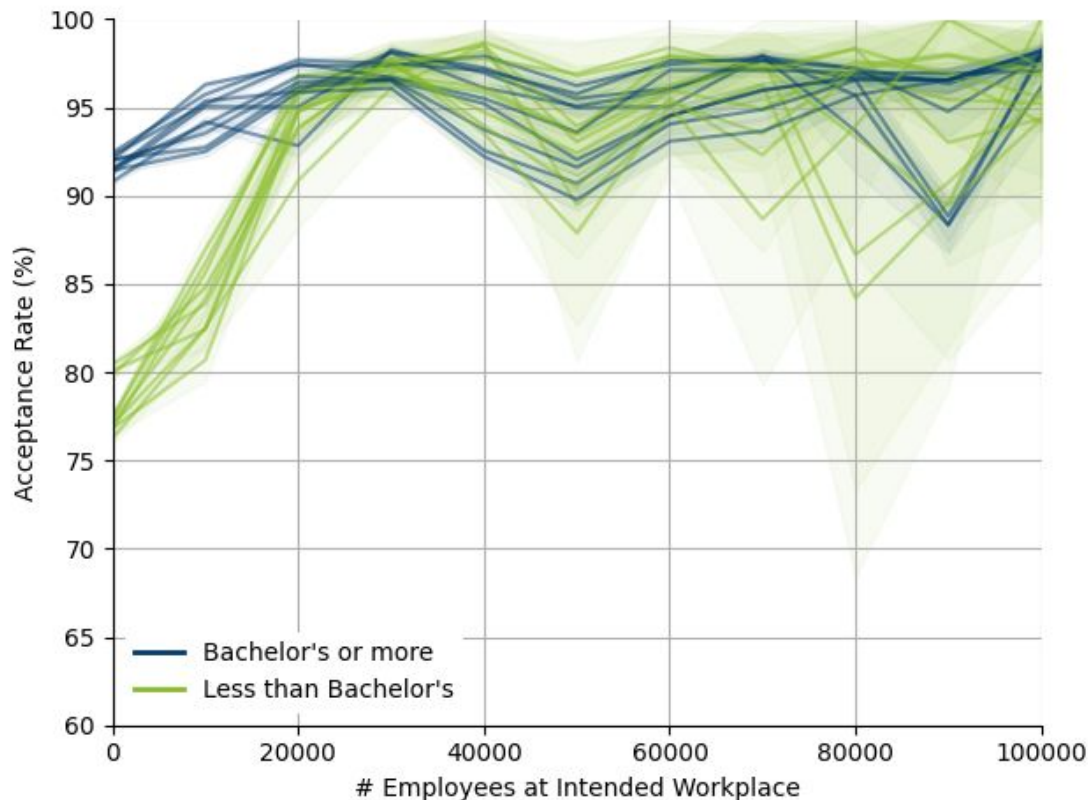

Company Size Compensates for Education

When a company is large enough, the difference in education becomes negligible

- Stronger HR
- Legal Connections
- Industry Experience

Company Size Always Mattered

When a company is large enough, the difference in education becomes negligible in all years

Each year is plotted separately

Superficial Trends that impact each other (spend minimal time)

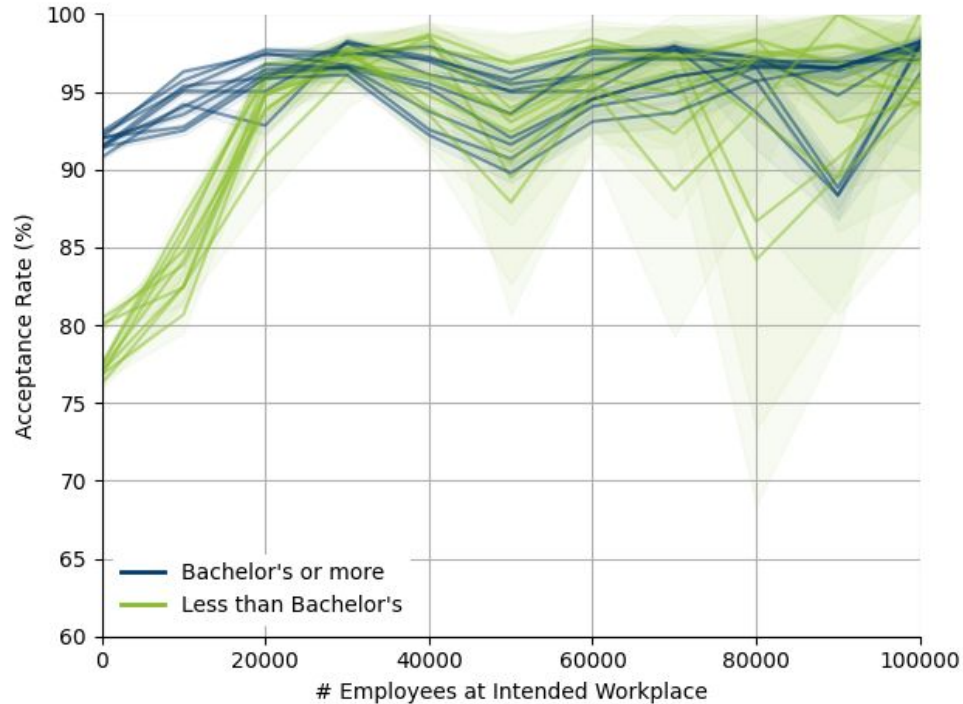

The 2 trends in the previous set of graphs are highly related

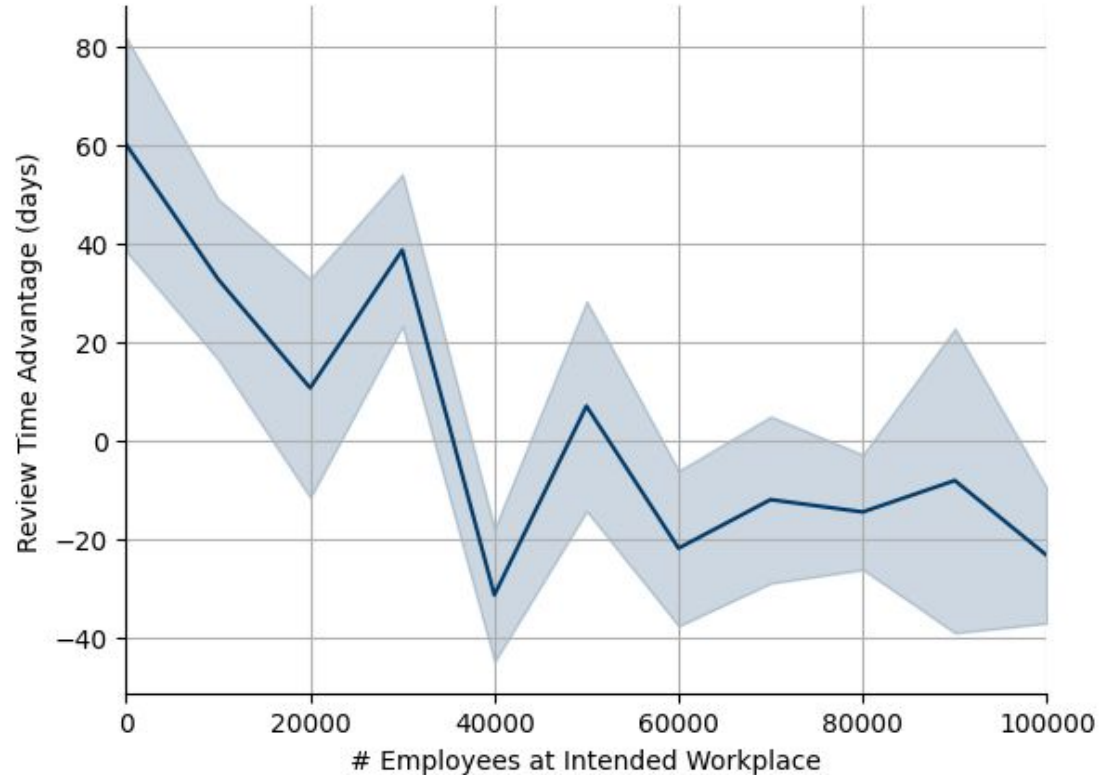

Redraw the lines from the last graph but separate by year (each year has 1 green 1 blue)

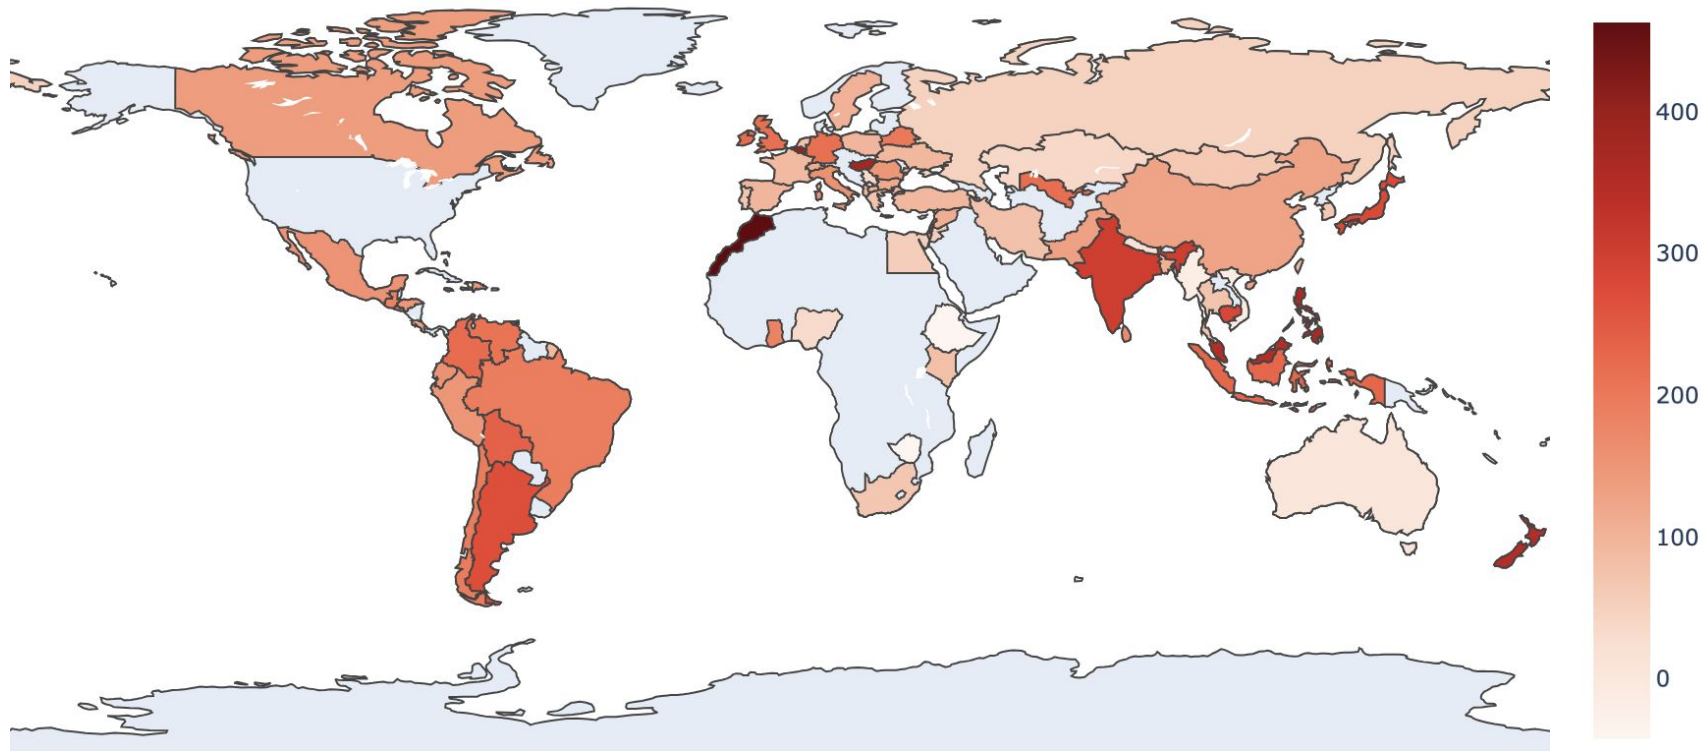

We find that the exact same trend holds independent of time

Shows review time advantage (days for educated - days for uneducated) over company size (less good of a graph but still useful I think)

Average Extra Days to Deny by Country of Citizenship
(ONLY COUNTRIES W/ > 500 APPLICANTS)

Acceptance Rate by Country of Citizenship (normalized for business size) (ONLY COUNTRIES W/ > 500 APPLICANTS)
